Homeless happy for the meal

They don't mind it's past holidays

By Candysse Miller

Randy and Suny Stone ate their Christmas dinner two days late, but considered themselves lucky to eat at all.

After having gone without food for three days, the homeless couple were happy to find a post-Christmas holiday dinner offered at Ontario's De Anza Park — even if they did have to rush through the traditional turkey feast.

"We've got no place to stay or nothing," said Randy. "We've got to hurry up and find a place to camp tonight."

Like nearly 250 other people, the Stones found their way to Questward Foundation Inc.'s holiday dinner through word of mouth. While looking for a place to pitch a tent earlier Dec. 27, they had heard that the homeless assistance group would offer a free dinner of turkey, stuffing and pie at the south Ontario park that night.

Trash trucks clean up after Santa's reindeer

Holiday season leftovers can be many: post-holiday depression, New Year's resolutions and expanding waistlines.

But more concrete leftovers of our revelries also linger. Expanding waste lines street corners. Apartment complex, commercial and industrial dumpsters runneth over.

Wrapping paper, Christmas trees, turkey bones, eggnog cartons and toy boxes are the presents trash collectors receive the day after Christmas and through the holiday season.

"I think I'll call in sick next year," said Richard Houseworth of Rancho Disposal. He and partner Marcy Ramirez performed litter duty at the Alta Park apartments in Rancho Cucamonga Dec. 26.

Normally, they just wheel the full dumpsters out and wheel them back in empty.

But Dec. 26, the dumpsters were literally buried in refuse. Disposal company officials say this is the post-Christmas norm.

"Apartments and trailer parks are the biggest problems," said Jack Avakian, route supervisor for Yukon Disposal, which handles at least 30 apartment complexes in northern Rancho Cucamonga.

Al Simonian, vice president of Western Waste Industries in Chino, estimates a 20 percent increase in trash volume the day after Christmas and said the three-week period around New Year's Day is particularly heavy.

"What you have is a lot of buying during this season, so the stores have a lot of empty boxes and bags," Simonian said.

Immediately after Christmas come the wrapping paper and boxes. Between Christmas and the first week of the year come the Christmas trees.

"Some people hold their Christmas trees until after New Year's," Simonian said.

In addition to the heavier loads, Christmas trees "can be hard to compact into the trucks," Simonian said.

Larger trees that grace the lobbies of banks and other offices usually have to be cut up, Cole Burr, president of Rancho Disposal, said. "Or we can send out a special truck."

His and other area disposal companies had Christmas off. This meant an extra day's trash piled onto the weekend duty.

Yukon and Western Waste both dispatched two extra trucks.

Co-dependents help each other through change

Children of dysfunctional families

By Sarah E. Crowley

Jean was so anxious to "fix" her prospective husband that she dragged the homeless drug addict off the streets "kicking and screaming."

"All I saw was blond hair and blue eyes and I was obsessed with him. I knew God had given me this person to love. And if I loved him hard enough, it would make the pain go away," she recalled.

"I was either controlling everything or manipulating to control everything. It wasn't unti I got my husband into a third treatment center that they told me I was sicker than he was."

Today Jean has a name for he sickness. She is a co-dependent.

A relatively recent phrase, it originally was coined in the 1970s to describe the spouses and children of alcoholics, those whose lives had been changed by such dependent, addictive behavior.

Researchers now believe that co-dependency is not strictly the result of alcoholism and that co-dependents traditionally come from dysfunctional families in which parents or family members displayed addictive behavior such as compulsive gambling, overeating or even workaholism.

Whatever the source, the basic symptoms include an inability to maintain healthy relationships, low self-esteem, an unnatural desire to seek approval and obsession with controlling other people's behavior.

Jean, a member of the Inland Empire CoDA which meets in Ontario, Chino, Rancho Cucamonga and Upland, traced her co-dependent behavior back to when she took care of her alcoholic mother.

"My father told me I had to keep her from drinking, which is a hell of an assignment for a 5-year-old. I remember sitting on cases of beer as a teen-ager, trying to keep her sober so father wouldn't come home and beat her up," said Jean, a member of the support group, Inland Empire CoDA. Like others interviewed for this story, she asked that her real name not be used.

Inland Empire CoDA comprises several area chapters which are all part of Co-Dependents Anonymous, a 12step program patterned after Alcoholics Anoymous, Inc.

Since its founding in 1986, the Phoenix, Ariz., organization now boasts 1,500 chapters in the United States, as well as members in Australia, Canada, England, Saudi Arabia, Mexico, Sweden and the Netherlands, said CoDA spokesman Les Hagman.

Other national support groups include the better known Women Who Love Too Much, based on the 1985 bestseller of the same name by Robin Norwood. While women are more commonly identified as being codependent, men also can be victims

And, said Tom — Jean's fellow member — the problem is not necessarily caused by chemical dependency.

"I came from a very authoritarian family, it was spare the rod and spoil the child. What my father said was gospel, he was God. I had no voice in anything and my feelings didn't count," said Tom, a recovering alcoholic. "As a result, I had no feelings about anything. The only feelings I got were after I took my first drink. Then I could be me, good or bad."

True to form, Tom met and married Alice, whose semi-invalid mother had dominated her life. Tom was one of three alcoholic husbands that Alice acquired. She and Tom now are divorced but belong to the same CoDA chapter.

Alice said part of the problem is that "codependents take care of everyone. That gave me a lot of power. The caretaking thing is very exciting for this type of person."

According to Melody Beattie, a co-dependent person is "one who has let another person's behavior affect him or her, and who is obsessed with controlling that person's behavior."

A recovering alcoholic and former drug addict, Beattie is also a co-dependent and author of the bestsellers, "Codependent No More" (which sold close to 1 million copies) and "Beyond Codependency." Both are published by Harper & Row/Hazeldon.

Now teaching a 20-hour course on alcoholism and drug addition at North Carolina College, she said in a phone interview that despite its present popularity, co-dependency has "always been prevalent as an addiction just as alcoholism has been prevalent. What's new is the focus of the recovery movement."

Beattie grew up in an alcoholic family and married an alcoholic. She said she became aware of her problem "one day

Child care available at college

For Chaffey night classes

By Lisa Van Proyen

Thanks to Chaffey Community College's Children's Center, mothers with their tots in tow — can attend night classes free from baby sitter worries and intent on the teacher's lecture.

Beginning in winter quarter, Jan. 2, the center will offer night students evening child care from 5:30 p.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday for $1.50 per night per child ages 2½ to 10.

"I think it's going to open up a lot of possibilities for students on campus that can't take classes during the day," said Beth Bowen, nutritionist for the night care program.

The service is a result of a needs assessment test taken on the campus during summer and fall quarters.

Test data showed 52 percent of Chaffey students attend at night, according to Sandra Hardie, director of the Children's Center.

So the college, wanting to improve night student services, granted the child care program under Assembly Bill AB 1725.

There will be no tuition charges for the evening child care program. However, the $1.50 fee is required per night to provide a light dinner for each child enrolled.

This grant is expected to be funded through spring quarter. Hardie is in the process of trying to find other money sources to support the program after spring.

"We're looking for ways that won't hassle the student," said

Vinnie Grau, 4, watches his brother Andrew Grau, 11, build high-rise at Chaffey College evening center.

"I think there's a great need and I'm looking forward to utilizing it," said Josie Grau, a night student with two children in the program.

The children will be provided the security services of the campus police during the night hours. Also, an office assistant will be working until 10 p.m.

During the child care hours, children will learn skills according to their age: toileting, extended children's projects, how to prepare food and homework.

The children will also be taking advantage of the campus facilities for activities, such as a night out to a campus theatrical production or taking a walk to the life science area

"The kids love it (life science). That may just be the ticket to turn them on to zoology," said Hardie.

"We really let the kids do things. If you equate it to your adult feeling — that's how they (the children) feel," Hardie said. The child care program will be run by an evening teacher with full credentials along with five child development teaching associates.

The teacher will ask the students in the beginning of the program what kind of activities they are interested in doing.

"If it's child-directed it's going to go. If it's teacherdirected it won't work," said Hardie.

Since there is a big discrepancy between the ages of the children, the night care will keep in mind what each age group would be doing at home, according to Hardie. For example, a 9-year-old may be resting at 9 p.m. while a 3-year-old would be in bed.

Siblings will not be separated during the night care.

Parents interested in the program may pick up an application in the Children's Center office at Chaffey College or contact Sandra Hardie at 941-2687.

when I was talking to a stranger on a suicide hotline, telling him I didn't know why I was calling, but I didn't want to go on living.

"Some people object to the word, but to me it meant I'm not crazy, I have a label for this thing I was doing."

Beattie also remarked that many have said the overwhelming interest in codependency is a fad, a trendy new psycho-disease. A statement that Jody Hayes disagrees with.

"It's a worldwide movement. Twelve-step programs are a real movement and not a fad. They've been around since the 1930s," said Hayes, author of "Smart Love," a co-dependency recovery workbook published by Jeremy P. Tarcher, Los Angeles.

The book features exercises and techniques developed from other 12-step programs. Since its April release, it's sold 30,000 copies, and has been translated into German.

Hayes, yet another recovering co-dependent, was involved with a Women Who Love Too Much group in San Francisco. She described herself as being "my family's scapegoat and suicidal as a kid," but credited her membership in the support group with saving her life.

Caltrans study says removing trees won't harm environment

By J. Rezendes-Herrick

SAN BERNARDINO — A Caltrans study has found that little environmental harm would result from uprooting more than 230 trees along the San Bernardino (10) Freeway.

The report sought by both billboard firms and environmentalists includes recommendations for new plantings and the installation of an irrigation system to save existing trees.

"I don't know if satisfied is the word I would choose," said Rialto Mayor John Longville, who with Fontana Mayor Nat Simon has led efforts to preserve the landscaping. "But I suppose we have to face the reality that if we want to get irrigation in there, we have to compromise."

"We don't have much choice, that's what they've come up with," added Tim Lynch, vice president of General Outdoor Advertising in Ontario. "We're willing to play by the rules."

The tree study released recently then moved into the bureaucratic mill. Copies are were to be sent to local governmental bodies for comment. A public hearing will be set for late January or early February to gather additional information.

The final document will permit construction to start on the irrigation system, perhaps as soon as the spring. Timelines are becoming critical for the eucalyptus trees that are beseiged by drought and

By J. Rezendes-Herrick

The Upland City Council extended a building ban Dec. 26 in the city's oldest residential neighborhood, stalling future duplex and apartment construction until at least next

The unanimous action at the special session continues the halt imposed in November to buy time for the city to revise its general plan.

Councilwoman Donna Vandersall likened the process to a balancing act between competing interests.

"It's been pointed out that we need to study which neighborhoods need to be changed and which neighborhoods need to maintain what they have now," she said. "That is what we're trying to do now with the (general plan) study.'

Mayor Robert Nolan alluded to the different sort of balancing act done by elected officials.

"Anytime you pass an ordinance there will be people "Anytime you pass an ordinance there will be people hurt. But our main job is to do as best as we possibly can for the city. This is something we have to do and I hope it works out for all. " hurt," he said. "But our main job is to do as best as we possibly can for the city. This is something we have to do and I hope it works out for all."

The $200,000, yearlong planning effort will look at land use, traffic circulation, housing profiles and development potential in the so-called southeast quadrant. The area is bounded by Foothill Boulevard on the north and Euclid Avenue on the west.

The council heard residents back or oppose the moratorium on multi-family housing during the half-hour public hearing.

Michael Thackeray recognized that "the older homes are beautiful and I think we should keep them. But there are certain lots that are vacant and they should be developed.'

Judy Inscore grew up in a Fifth Street home that now stands next to an apartment house. With the death of her mother, Inscore said she is saddled with land that cannot be developed.

"I've got to do something with the property. But it's hard to find someone who would want to live there with what's happened to the neighborhood," she said.

Mike Lucas spoke in favor of the halt in his capacity as first vice president of the Upland Historical Preservation Society The group was founded to halt infestations of the borer beetle.

"The timing is such that if we have to go through another summer without getting an irrigation system in place, the beetle is going to do greater damage," said Deborah Robertson with the District 8 Caltrans office.

The report resulted from a rash of legal and illicit tree trimming last spring along the freeway corridor. Caltrans issued trimming permits in March to several billboard companies in line with state regulations for keeping the roadside ads visible. But several trees were drastically cut back, and Fontana officials obtained a court order temporarily halting the cutting.

In May, at least three illegal tree trimmings done without Caltrans permits created a stir and raised the hackles of those fighting to preserve foliage along the highway.

Fontana's legal challenge was resolved in June when Superior Court Judge Rex Victor ruled that environmental studies must accompany applications for tree trimming permits, kicking off the study completed last week.

During the summer, Caltrans officials met with billboard firms and city representatives to arrive at a compromise that would permit continued billboard visibilty while preserving as many trees as possible.

The result was a tentative accord in which General Outdoor, Adams Advertising Co. and Kunz & Co. would contribute $340,000 to design and install a 13-mile irrigation system. In return, the firms would be able to remove 236 eucalyptus trees obstructing billboards. But the trees must be replaced at a 10to-1 ratio with new trees or low level shrubs.

The report was done by Michael Brandman Associates. The consultant found no significant environmental damage would result from the proposed tree removal.

The affected area runs from Etiwanda Avenue near Ontario to Rancho Avenue in Colton. The corridor contains about 12,000 eucalyptus trees.

The tree removals would not harm wildlife or adjacent vegetation, degrade the visual surroundings or harm the windbreak or noise break functions of the trees, the consultants reported.

Walls of Chaffey boiler room go tumbling down

d not become used beauty and beauty; included beauthouse the facilities

End of tradition for high school

By Natalie Shore

Had it not been for technology, the aesthetic battle over one of Ontario's most unlikely monuments could have lasted for years.

But to the dismay of some and the delight of others, the war is over. The walls of the Chaffey High School boiler room came tumbling down in December.

'We're dismantling it," Steve Butters, business services director of the Chaffey Joint Union High School District, said.

The bulky wooden structure has taken center stage in the campus quad since 1935 when boilers were installed to heat four main buildings. In recent vears, students discovered the walls had an additional purpose a three-dimensional graffiti board was born and quickly became a controversial campus tradition.

The debate exploded in September 1988 when students launched a protest after Principal Karen Dunn had the building repainted a solid beige. Although students won back the right to paint, the boiler room already was losing a silent battle against campus modernization.

By then, most of the main buildings had been weaned from the antiquated heating system, Butters said. For the past year, only Spring Auditorium remained connected to the aging facility, he said.

The boiler room had become unsafe and inefficient. But the final decision to ditch it came after the South Coast Air Quality Management District ordered the school to outfit the system with a sophisticated emissions control system, Butters said.

The work would have cost the school district upwards of $50,000 - more than the total cost of removing the boiler room and relandscaping the area, he

Despite last year's uproar, campus reaction to the decision has been limited, said Chaffev's principal. Students responded calmly because they were included on the committee to decide what to do with the cleared area, Dunn said.

Based on the committee's recommendation, grass and trees will fill the vacant spot. Dunn is glad to see the boiler

Students had climbed all over the building to paint their figures and slogans, at risk of serious injury, Dunn said. Furthermore, gang symbols were replacing school spirit artwork.

"Having the structure was a real liability," she said.

Sophomore Matt Schneider sat on the boiler room committee. Student feelings were mixed about the loss, but the news came as no surprise,

The structure may be doomed, but plans already are under way to preserve the tradition, Dunn said. The high school intends to place the boiler room bricks and mementos up for sale, she said.

the influx of duplexes and apartments into the area

Lucas said the multi-family projects place greater strains on city police, fire and utility services. He added affordable housing sought by some already exists in the southeast.

'Apartments do bring problems," he said. "Our goal is to have a pride of ownership and a sense of community. We are not against development. But we are against senseless (overbuilding)."

Councilman Thomas McGilloway said, "It would be nice if everybody could be happy. But we are not able to reach that point. There is no legal basis for doing any development until we have the general plan in line. Unless we have the brakes put in, we'll just be shooting at a moving target.' Councilwoman Rosalie Kamansky added, "You have to consider individual property owners along with the whole picture, the circumstances are sometimes different. I don't want us to forget that people who own their own property have rights, too.'

The council also spent nearly an hour discussing labor negotiations behind closed doors, but no compromise was reached.

The city is in the midst of talks with unions representing police officers and general employees and is trying to conclude pacts with mid-level police and fire management.

"This was put on the agenda in case we had an agreement," said City Manager Ray Silver following the meeting with the city attorney. "We need a little more time to continue talking with employees."

Chimneys need more than one sweeping a year

By Kenneth Houck

For many Southern California homeowners the jolly old man who slides down their chimney on Christmas Eve is the only way some chimneys ever get cleaned, according to an area chimney sweep.

People often mistakenly think that if they use their chimneys a few times a year, the chimneys don't need cleaning, said Tom Michael, owner of Soot Busters chimney sweeps in Rancho Cucamonga.

If a chimney is not cleaned regularly, creosote builds up in the chimney, inceasing the chance of sparking a chimney fire, Michael said.

"Often times the only thing left standing after a chimney fire is the chimney," Michael

Thus he urges homeowners to have their chimney inspected every two years to determine if cleaning or repair is needed. Aside from a regular

Aside from a regular cleaning, Michael said a chimney cap should be installed to keep rain, leaves, animals and bird droppings from accumulating in the chimney and creating a fire hazard.

Rain and foreign materials can accumulate in a fireplace's smoke shelf and build up acids that destroy the mortar and bricks, Michael said.

Cleaning is just one part of chimney maintenance, Michael said. Sweeps often patch and fill crumbling mortar. If the chimney's crown of cement is cracked or damaged, many sweeps can take down and build a new one if neccessary, he added.

Chimney sweeps should do a safety inspection after a chimney cleaning so the owner is aware of the stack's condition.

If additional repairs are needed the sweep then should inform the owner and schedule a follow-up cleaning date. Michael said consumers may choose to authorize the repairs, which usually are not included in the cost of the sweep.

Michael has been a chimney sweep in Rancho Cucamonga for nearly a year. He studied his craft under Don Leavitt, who was one of eight sweeps chosen to clean the White House chimneys

Michael dresses in the traditional top hat and tails of the sweeps of Victorian England. Originally, little children were used to clean chimneys by climbing them using their clothes as brushes, Michael said. The children rarely lived past the age of 12, he added.

OVERLOOKED INJURIES

explains one injuries into the work related but often overlooked.

HEART ATTACKS: A heart attack can be work related. Take for example the employee who is carrying a refrigerator up a hundred steps and experiences a heart attack on the ninety-ninth step. This would be relatively easy to show that the work caused the injury and therefore the employee would be entitled to receive Workers' Compensation benefits.

Another example is the employee who during the course of an argument with his supervisor experiences a heart attack. If it can be shown that the stress of the argument or the emotional trauma of the argument triggered the heart attack, then this employee should receive Workers' Compensation.

The actual heart attack may occur at

EMOTIONAL PROBLEMS: Emotional problems such as a "nervous breakdown," depression, anxiety, high blood pressure can all be caused by your employment. School teachers dealing with young children seem to experience more emotional problems than school teachers dealing with college students. Policemen and firemen always seem to end up with high blood pressure and heart problems. The law presumes that these injuries are caused by their employment.
